ANNOTATION

The Student Scientific Conference responds to current challenges for democracy, especially in the context of Slovakia and the European area. After the COVID-19 pandemic and the outbreak of the conflict in Ukraine, Europe is facing new challenges that may manifest themselves in the outcome of the European Parliament elections and consequently change the political course on the continent. The presence of disinformation, political radicalisation and extremism is also becoming a constant threat in the 21st century. These often seek to erode trust in democracy, undermine the integrity of elections or reinforce the polarization and conflict in society. The given aspects allow for an academic discussions and interdisciplinary solutions with regard to the study of both domestic and international layers of the issues. We are at a moment that calls for a responsible academic approach in offering reflections, possible solutions to gradually emerging, resonating and challenging issues. In this respect, the conference takes into account the growing topicality of its core themes, which underlines the necessity of intensive research by students and young scientists from the fields of political science, international relations, sociology, history, law, journalism and others, in order to create a professional discourse on the selected thematic areas.
